Frequently Asked Questions

1. Who should take this program?
   You’re perfect for this program if you’re a teacher who is interested in exploring literacy related curriculum and instruction issues at the elementary, middle, and secondary school levels. There are instructional challenges that face teachers who are designing literacy curriculum for native English speakers and students who are acquiring English as a second language. We will present approaches, strategies, and materials that are most effective when developing the literacy of all students at all grade levels. This culturally relevant instruction and curriculum will be well correlated with national, state, and local standards.

2. How many courses are required and when will I take these courses?
   The entire Master’s degree program of study can be completed in three semesters (as long as you have recently completed a credential program at the post-bac level). The 30 unit program consists of eight (3 unit) courses. You will also receive up to 6 units of credit for credential work completed in the past 4 years. If your credential work is older than 4 years or earned at the undergraduate level, then you will have to take 6 additional units to complete the program. Some of these units may be available in the summer, but some may need to be completed in the regular school year. Courses are offered at 4pm or 7pm to accommodate year round professionals.

3. I am a full-time teacher. Will I be able to complete this program?
   This program was designed for full-time teachers with work and life schedules that cannot accommodate graduate study during the regular school year. With the exception of the summer conference (TE 638) classes meet in the evenings at 4pm or 7pm. Year round teachers may complete the summer conference (TE 638), which occurs yearly during the first week of the program from 9:00-4:00, via video.
